A Time to Reflect on Traditions

Do you ever find yourself reminiscing about your childhood days? Maybe a family trip to the beach, backyard barbecues, or special Sunday breakfasts? For some, the happiest childhood memories are centered on some family or cultural tradition.

Traditions are the foundation of strong bonds. As people become more and more disconnected due to hectic schedules, there seems to be less time to enjoy the simple traditions that were once a vital part of everyday life. Simple rituals such as taking a weekend family outing, playing games or even dinners bringing people together are becoming lost. For many, the holidays have shifted from meaningful time spent together to trying to balance the stresses of work, seasonal decorating, gift-buying and active kids on school break.

Many of us miss the little traditions that embodied our childhood, yet find it difficult to fit them back into our current way of life. Traditions, however, do not have to be complex, time-consuming, or even expensive in order to have great impact. Nor do we have to wait for a holiday to kick-start one. Whether it's a family or friend reunion once a year or movie night once a week, establishing routine customs is a great way to connect with others.

If an existing tradition starts to lose its appeal, then create a new one. Getting others excited and involved in identifying a new activity is an important way to establish a tradition with meaning. Once these activities are chosen, work on building them into a ritual. Traditions have to start somewhere.

To get the ball rolling and some conversation started, below are some fun facts about the upcoming celebration of The 4th of July:

- Representatives of the 13 colonies voted on July 2, 1776, in Philadelphia to declare independence. But it wasn't until two days later that a congressional committee approved the final draft.
- Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence as a formal explanation of why the colonies should secede. John Adams and Benjamin Franklin edited it.
- "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness" is the second, but the most well-known, sentence.
- The Revolutionary War started before independence was declared. The battles of Lexington and Concord, in April 1775 in Massachusetts, achieved that.
- The Revolutionary War ended in 1783.
- In 1787, 11 years after the Declaration of Independence, the U.S. Constitution was created.

Teens and Body Image

Adults understand that the teenage years can be hard – especially if a person had issues with how they looked at that age. Here are some ways to help your teen (girls and boys) have a better body image:

- Don't obsess over food and calories
 avoid commenting on the weight of yourself or others.
- Have fun-shaped healthy snacks available such as unusual shaped crackers, cheese sticks, veggies cut in different shapes. The more interesting food is, the more appealing it may become.
- Be daring with your food try different herbs and spices or try cuisines from different cultures. Try not to put negative connotations with any type of food.
- Be available to talk about how unrealistic body images are displayed in the media. Tell them it's okay to not look like the air-brushed, photo-shopped images they see in magazines, on television, on-line or in social media.
- Don't forget to compliment your teen – and not just about their looks.
 Reward their accomplishments so that they grow up knowing that they don't have to always look good to get recognition.

When a teen talks negatively about their own body, keep the lines of communication open to talk and discourage them from being so hard on themselves. Most importantly lead by example. If you worry about every calorie you put in your body or constantly fret about how you look, your teen will pick up on that habit and come to think they must look "perfect" in order to be loved.

Positive Thinking Techniques

Our minds are incredibly powerful tools. If your thoughts are positive and uplifting, you will increase the likelihood of seeing your goals through to fruition. If they are negative, however, you can have just the opposite effect. Obviously it is in our best interest to keep our minds thinking positively. Engage in the following for a consistent stream of positive thinking.

Start with a Plan: You are far more likely to think positively about your day if you have a specific plan for what you want to accomplish. Make them simple enough to get done in one day, but challenging enough to keep you motivated.

Positive Vibes: Positivity can be contagious. Make it a point to surround yourself with people who think and act in an uplifting manner.

Give Thanks: Stopping to realize everything you appreciate in your life makes you automatically feel more positive of all the good that surrounds you.

Exercise: Maybe the most powerful tool in continuing to think positive is a consistent habit of physical activity. Your brain produces chemicals called endorphins during exercise which gives the body a natural high.

Take Charge: By stepping out and being in control of a situation, you will be more inclined to feel positive about it. Don't be afraid of failure.

Keep At It: Positivity is quick to fade. Thinking positively means understanding you will face obstacles, and having the confidence and energy to overcome them.

Meditate: Negative thinking often occurs in cycles. Meditation allows your mind to clear and think logically about your life without the distractions of life. The calm inside yourself will bring you back to reality and get your thought process back on track.

Verbal Abuse: What Is It?

Verbal abuse is a phrase many hear, but interestingly find it hard to describe.

What may also compound this difficulty, is the old playground adage "sticks and stones may break my bones, but words can never hurt me."

For many this is simply not true, and can even cause irreparable damage.

So how is verbal abuse defined? It is a dominating method of speaking used to gain power and control over another person. In 2015, Psychology Today gave 15 ways in which people can be verbally abusive:

- Withholding
- Countering
- Discounting
- Blocking/diverting
- Accusing/blaming
- Judging/criticizing
- Trivializing
- Undermining
- Threating
- Name-calling
- Forgetting
- Ordering
- Denial
- · Abusive anger
- Verbal abuse disguised as joking

Though these all cannot be defined here, what is important to note is that each of these – if done excessively and with malice – is considered a controlling behavior which can completely demoralize another person.

What many fail to realize is that verbal abuse occurs not only in partner relationships, but also can occur anywhere, like at school, family, friends, at work, those holding powerful positions in our society, or even neighbors. It is for this reason that people need to educate themselves on what verbal abuse is, and how they can stand strong against it.

Also, because society works hard to instill the "sticks and stones" rationale it's important that people speak up for others if they observe verbally abusive behavior. Silence essentially shows agreement with a behavior. Therefore, if you observe someone being verbally abused, it can be critical to find some way to counter it (but, that does not necessarily mean confronting the abuser).

In a final note: it is important to be fully versed in verbal abuse before deciding if the issue is or isn't abusive. A singular random argument, curse word, or even joke in poor taste does not indicate verbally abusive behavior. When a system of behavior exists, that is when it's abusive. And sometimes identifying it can be quite difficult. The good news is your EAP is here to help! Contact us, if you need more information.

Water...Why Do We Need It?

How water helps our body:

- Regulates our body temperature
- Removes toxins and waste from the body
- Lubricates joints and other parts of our body to help lessen inflammation and arthritis
- · Repairs cells more efficiently
- · Helps cells carry more oxygen to aid in better muscle function and repair
- Helps moisturize the air in our lungs
- Aids in digestion

Did you know?

- With only a slight 2 percent drop in our body's water supply dehydration can occur. Around 75 percent of Americans have on a daily basis.
- A good way to tell if you are drinking enough fluids is to look at your urine. The goal is to have your urine almost clear to a light lemonade color.

Test your water knowledge:

- 1. What percent of our blood is water?
- 2. What percent of water is in our bones?
- 3. There is ____ % of water in our muscle.
- 4. Our brains are made up of around _____ % of water.

%58 'P c. 22% %56 [.]9 W51.D HUSWELS:

Common signs of dehydration:

- Tiredness or sleepiness
- · Dry mouth and skin
- Thirst
- · Headaches, dizziness, or lightheadedness
- Constipation
- · Fuzzy short-term memory and difficulty focusing
- Decrease urine output / dark yellow or brown color urine

So how much do we need a day? A good rule of thumb is for every 20 pounds you weigh you should drink 1 cup (8 oz) of water. For example a 200 pound person should aim for 10 cups (80 oz) of water daily. However, drinking beverages with caffeine or alcohol will have the opposite effect on keeping you hydrated. Both caffeine and alcohol act as a mild diuretic which promotes water loss. So if your drinks have caffeine or alcohol in them you will need to drink more water.
